MIAMI (AP) — A knife-wielding hijacker was overpowered by passengers and crew aboard an Eastern Airlines jetliner Thursday after he had ordered the pilot to divert to Cuba.

The plane landed safely at Miami where the suspect, identified by the FBI as Allah Roland Kagan, 24, of Holyoke, Mass., was arrested and charged with air piracy.

A Federal Aviation Administration spokesman said the incident began when a man "approached the stewardess with a knife and said, 'We're going to Cuba.' The incident aboard the Miami-bound flight occurred just after takeoff from Guatemala, the FAA said.

There were 84 passengers and six crew members aboard the flight, the agency said.

James Westendorf, a Hollywood, Fla., passenger who helped subdue the man, said the hijacker and the stewardess went to the first-class section and sat down. Westendorf said he did not see a weapon.

"All of a sudden we were going to Cuba," he said. "We had dropped our wheels and were getting ready to land in Havana." He said a crew member tried to persuade the hijacker it would be better if the plane went to Key West, Fla.

The crew member then returned to the cockpit and the captain came out to speak with the hijacker. Westendorf said he was seated immediately behind the hijacker in the first-class section.

"I thought to myself, 'Maybe there's something I can do to help.' The captain was on his knees talking to the hijacker. He (the captain) grabbed him.

"I grabbed him around the neck and told the captain to bus him in the old you-know-what," said Westendorf.

The hijacker was tied up with neckties and part of a seatbelt, Westendorf said. "He was a conspicuous character," said passenger Gary Shapiro, 25, of Athens, Ga. "If I was going to pick someone who was going to be a hijacker, I'd say he was just too conspicuous."

Shapiro said the hijacker was blond, wearing a red scarf on his head, a white shirt, brown vest, and black pants that were too short. The man attracted attention before the flight because he was playing loud music on a cassette tape recorder, said Shapiro, an archeologist who was studying ruins in Central America.

After the jet landed at Miami International Airport, the passengers were questioned by the FBI.

Fishing excellent

Fishermen throughout the area seem to be pleased with their catches this year, and Jim Culp, owner of Jim's Tackle Shop, said Thursday there are more good times ahead for fishing enthusiasts.

"This is the best time of the year in the Skeena for steelhead," he explained, "since the steelhead are migrating through the Skeena right now and pass right by Terrace."

Culp said the fishermen, most having good luck with 'spin and glo' lures or the same lures and roe, are finding sandbars along Highway 16 the best fishing spots, but said fish are still being caught by campers on Ferry Island.

Both tourists and residents alike, said Culp, should pay attention to the regulations for sport fishing laid out by the B.C. Fish and Wildlife Branch, which are available at sport shops.

These restrictions include limits on the number of fish which can be kept according to species, restrictions on the types of bait and hooks allowed in specific areas, and dates when certain rivers are closed.

One local fisherman said more fishermen are releasing their catch in an effort to conserve the sport's resources.

"The fish and wildlife branch heartily endorses this philosophy of voluntary catch and release," says the regulations book.

The book also gives guidelines for fishermen interested in releasing their catch unharmed.

OTTAWA (CP) — The body of John George Diefenbaker will be laid in state today in the Parliament buildings, just a few dozen yards from the Commons chamber where the former prime minister became a living legend during the last 39 years.

A full state funeral will be held Sunday for the 83-year-old father of the Bill of Rights who died Thursday from a heart attack in his home.

The body will then be carried across the country by train to Saskatoon for burial Wednesday, stopping at cities and towns en route where the people Diefenbaker called "my fellow Canadians" will have an opportunity to pay their last respects.

Diefenbaker, who served as prime minister from 1957-63, will be buried at the Diefenbaker Centre near the University of Saskatchewan on the banks of the Saskatchewan River.

According to Diefenbaker's wishes, the remains of his second wife, Olive, will be exhumed from an Ottawa cemetery and also be transported by train for burial at the university, where he first studied law and later served as chancellor. Mrs. Diefenbaker died in December, 1976.

NICKNAME FAMOUS
Dief the Chief, as he was known to Canadians including the Saskatchewan voters who sent the staunch monarchist to the House of Commons following every election since 1940; died clutching some parliamentary papers.

"I think it was the way he would have wanted to go," Keith Martin, his executive assistant, told reporters.

Moments after Martin announced the death of the former Progressive Conservative leader, flags on Parliament Hill were lowered to half mast and black bunting surrounded his portrait in a corridor near the Commons.

He rose as usual Thursday morning at 5:15 a.m. EDT and began reading some papers concerned with the opening Oct. 9 of the first Parliament dominated by the Conservatives since Lester Pearson defeated Diefenbaker's splintered party in 1963.

Archie McQueen, who has been spending summers with Diefenbaker as a special assistant, found the body about 7 a.m. sprawled on a couch in the study of his home in posh Rockcliffe Park, an Ottawa suburb. The study was filled with mementos of his greatest hero, Sir John A. Macdonald, the first prime minister.

Efforts to revive Diefenbaker were unsuccessful and he was pronounced dead by his longtime physician, Dr. J.C. Samis.

Diefenbaker recently recovered from a bout of pneumonia he claimed had brought him uncomfortably close to death. Less than a week ago, he was boasting about his newly-regained health and was excited about planned trips to China and the North Pole.

His last full day, Wednesday, was spent in his memorabilia-filled Parliament Hill office, preparing for the new Parliament. He also made a rare appearance at the National Press Club to celebrate the acquisition of a new billiard table.

That evening at home, he continued working and watched part of a baseball game on television before

Tributes pouring in

Moments after John Diefenbaker's death the tributes started and within a few hours they were pouring in — from his former cabinet ministers, from the longtime friends who spoke of his decency and honesty and from his political enemies.

A theme emerged from their comments: John George Diefenbaker — prime minister from June 21, retiring at 10 p.m.

Diefenbaker was to have gone to the Yukon today to participate in the opening of the Dempster Highway, linking the Yukon to Inuvik, N.W.T. — a project conceived during his days as prime minister.

Parliament Hill was flooded by tributes moments after his death.

"Canada has lost a man of great stature," the Queen said in a statement issued from London.

Prime Minister Clark, who occasionally suffered the sting of Diefenbaker's sharp tongue, said:

"We have lost a rare man. His imprint on this nation is permanent and all of us who were privileged to work with him know that we will never see his likes again."

But it was all forgotten when Knowles and Diefenbaker's wife, Olive, discovered that their ancestors both came to the United States from Britain on the Mayflower centuries ago.

"From then on, John and I were very good friends," Knowles said.

Others who knew Diefenbaker had similar comments.

E. David Fulton, justice minister in the Diefenbaker cabinet and now a justice of the British Columbia Supreme Court: "His judgments may sometimes have been clouded, but his sense of purpose was not and he was capable of great generosity."

clough of Hamilton, secretary of state in Diefenbaker's cabinet, on her way to work in a Toronto office building when a man lashed from a bookstore in a hotel mall and shocked her with the news. "I don't think he'll ever be forgotten," she said. "In my opinion he had the greatest impact on the Canadian scene of anybody since Sir John A. Macdonald."

Tougher times seen

POINTE-AU-PIC, Que. (CP) — The 10 provincial premiers see tough times ahead for Canada's economy and want the federal government to take immediate action to counter looming unemployment and inflation problems.

But determined to have their say, they agreed at their 20th annual conference Thursday to organize a federal-provincial finance ministers' meeting before a federal budget is presented in the fall.

Quebec Premier Rene Levesque, hosting the conference, told reporters after Thursday's closed meeting that economy and energy talks filled most of the day.

Levesque said the premiers want to know as soon as possible what will be on the agenda at the November economic meeting to outline priorities. "Otherwise we'll have disappointing results as in 1978," he said.

The start of the conference Thursday was overshadowed by the death of former prime minister John Diefenbaker. The premiers paid tribute to "The Chief" which required some of them to swallow political and even personal antagonism before buckling down to the first of three business sessions.

During the session, the premiers also endorsed a proposal by Nova Scotia Premier John Buchanan calling for more tax shelters for industry and a general loosening of the tax system to help poorer provinces attract investors.

Even before the board announced the increase, there was plenty of new evidence that the U.S. was slipping deeper into the recession that most economists believe will continue into 1980.

The commerce department said housing starts in July declined seven per cent from June and an 18-per cent decline from a year earlier.

Thus charge more when they

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Federal Reserve Board increased its bank lending rate to a record 10.5 per cent Thursday, virtually ensuring higher interest rates that likely will worsen the recession in the United States.

The increase in the board's discount rate from 10 per cent means that banks which borrow from the Federal Reserve Board will have to pay more to borrow, and thus charge more when they purchases than they had been doing a year before. The U.S. figure was 10.8 per cent in May and 10.9 per cent in June. The May figure for the U.S. was the highest among the 12 countries reporting. In June, Britain's figure rose to 11.3 per cent.

The upward tendency also was visible in West Germany, Japan, Belgium, Sweden, Norway and Switzerland. Among the 12, Switzerland still had the lowest figure in May, a price rise of only 2.9 per cent for the preceding 12 months, closely followed by Japan and Austria with 3.1 per cent. But Switzerland showed a considerable jump to an annual rate of four per cent in June, for which the Japanese and Austrian figures were not available.

France remained stable at the high rate of 10.1 per cent.

The IMF reported in a memorandum that the rich industrial countries are going deeper into the red on their international trade. They bought $87.3 billion worth of goods in May, a record figure and nearly $10 billion more than they sold. That deficit was more than twice as large as April's.

TOM BERGER:

Native claims more than land

VANCOUVER (CP) — A settlement of native claims will not be merely a matter of providing land and money, says Mr. Justice Thomas Berger of the British Columbia Supreme Court.

Berger said Wednesday that the claims extend to renewable and non-renewable resources, education, health and social services, public order and "over-arching all of these, the future shape and composition of political institutions."

Speaking to the International Congress of Americanists, he said native claims are founded on something as important to the urban native as it is to the rural native.

"Their determination to remain distinct peoples is based on their conviction that individual identity depends on collective identity — knowing who you are means knowing who your people are, where your home is."

Berger said native people do not wish to return to the past.

"They do not wish to be the objects of mere sentimentality," he said. "They do not say that native culture, native communities and the native economy should be preserved in amber for our amusement and edification."

"Rather, they wish to ensure that their culture can continue to grow and change — in directions they choose for themselves."

The settlement of native claims should provide the means to enable native people to thrive and native culture to develop, said Berger.

30 STILL AT SEA

Storm hampers yacht search

PLYMOUTH, England (CP) — Another big storm blew up off southwest England Thursday, curbing efforts to locate more victims of the ill-fated Fastnet yacht race. About 30 boats are reported still at sea and at least three sailors are still missing.

The Royal Ocean Racing Club, sponsors of the tragic, 19-country racing classic, said most of those still at sea are in relatively sheltered waters of the English Channel.

Four Canadian yachts in the race are safe. The Magistri of Toronto, the Evergreen of Hamilton and the Manitou of Oakville, Ont., are in Plymouth. The Pachena of Vancouver took shelter in Crosshaven, Ireland.

On the day before Tuesday's disastrous storm, the eight-member Magistri was almost run down by a tanker in a blanket of fog. During Tuesday's storm "a wave hit us and turned us right over," said crew member Andre Calle, 27.

"We thought it was all over." The Magistri righted herself and the three Canadians on deck, roped to the boat, held on. The five below deck were flung from side to side but there were no injuries.

The Fastnet formed part of the Admiral's Cup series. Australia was declared winner of the Admiral's Cup taking the trophy for only the second time. Impetuous led the winning trio.

The Australian team totalled 1,088 points for the five-race series with the United States runners-up on 1,013. Canada placed second last in the 19-country standings.

The Cup presentation will take place today but instead of the customary celebration party, it will be followed by a church service for the 17 yachtsmen who lost their lives during the storm-whipped Fastnet race. Fifteen of the dead were in the race. The others were non-participants.

Meanwhile, Ted Turner, owner of the Atlanta Braves and Atlanta Hawks, learned his yacht Tenacious had won the Fastnet race.

"It's hard to be real happy," he said, surrounded by his crew, "because so many are in that great yacht race in the sky."

The Mayor of Plymouth, Graham Jinks, launched an appeal fund for families of the victims.

As chaos abated, the Royal Ocean Racing Club changed its count of participants in the classic race from 306 to 300 and said all were accounted for as safe, sunk or abandoned. Only 88 yachts finished the race.

The club said about 50 entrants are still sailing, including the Royal Navy boat Kalisana which had been out of contact with shore for two days.

Among the stragglers reaching harbor Thursday was the German yacht Jan Pott. Its crew members said they did a 360-degree turn when capsized at the height of last Monday's storm. The vessel lost its mast, but the sailors rigged up sails enabling them to reach port.

In London a spokesman for Lloyd's insurance underwriters said the Fastnet disaster would result in the biggest-ever claims after an ocean race. "There has never been anything on this scale before," a spokesman said.

Peter Coucher, a leading Lloyd's insurance underwriter, said many of the yachts ranged in value between $89,200 to $1.56 million.

Young says maybe to meet

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Ambassador Andrew Young hinted Thursday he may meet again with the Palestine Liberation Organization representative to the U.N., Zehdi Labib Terzi. It was an international flap over his unauthorized meeting with Terzi last month that caused him to resign as the chief U.S. delegate to the U.N.

Young told a news conference that if Terzi asked to see him in his capacity as this month's president of the U.N. Security Council, it would be unconscionable to turn him down.

Young also told the conference, held the day after President Carter accepted his resignation, that he will begin consultations Monday about a possible council meeting on the Palestine issue next Thursday.

"The only difference might be that any consultations I conduct I will conduct in the office of the president of the Security Council."

Young's July 26 talk with Terzi dealt with possible postponement of a council meeting planned for July 31 on whether to add Palestinian self-determination to the specifications for peace in the Middle East.

The meeting finally was postponed but when the news got out that the U.S. ambassador had talked to the PLO about it, Israel protested a U.S. promise not to deal with the PLO had been violated.

At Thursday's news conference, Young said if the council met next Thursday, and if it was Washington's decision to cast a veto on a resolution then, he "would have no hesitation in casting that veto."

In another forum, Young took the Carter administration to task on several counts.

He was quoted as saying in a copyrighted interview with the Cox Newspapers Washington bureau that he felt diplomatic relations should immediately be established with Hanoi; that the U.S. should drop its restrictions on trade with Havana; that he disagreed with administration plans to increase defence spending and with Carter's proposal to build the $26-billion MX missile system.

He also said he could not dispute claims that the U.S. is largely responsible for the exodus of almost a million refugees from Southeast Asia because it had refused to recognize Vietnam and because U.S. bombing of Vietnam's farmlands had caused major food shortages.

Young was not apologetic about meeting Terzi. He told the U.S. state department first that it was a chance meeting with no shop talk, then corrected the account after giving the full story to Israeli Ambassador Yehuda Blum.

Explaining why he did not tell Washington all in the beginning, Young said: "I sought to protect the state department from any consciousness of what I was doing."

"I have no regrets," he said. "I would do it again. I've never wanted this job. I have not sold my soul. I would not take a reprimand."

In the U.S., reaction from political leaders was mixed. Black leaders generally opposed the resignation.

NEWS BRIEFS

WINNIPEG (CP) — Producer-director John Hirsch has come home to Winnipeg but he doesn't like what he sees.

"This used to be a very warm and dynamic city, but it's changed fundamentally. It's become a city of pinball machines and submarine sandwiches." So says the man who helped found the Manitoba Theatre centre in 1956.

Hirsch is in Winnipeg for a two-week assignment, on loan from CBC-TV in Toronto where he continues to work as a consulting director two years after stepping down as head of English-language drama.

He compares with regret the Winnipeg of 1979 with the Winnipeg he first knew when he arrived from Hungary in 1947.

"Winnipeg used to be a place to develop, a place where things generated," he says. "People always looked to us for growth."

He points to the city's former position as a leader in the development of cultural institutions in Canada. Winnipeg had the first ballet company, the first regional theatre and the second musical theatre.

Now, he says the city seems to "overrun with lost children" and the social effects are clearly visible.

"There's some kind of problem that's not attributable to economics. I've noticed this for a while but this time it hit me like a ton of bricks."

The change is reflected in the artistic community as well, he says, pointing to the way young Canadian playwrights are no longer featured at the theatre centre.

Police say no leads yet

MONTREAL (CP) — Police say they have no firm leads in the $390,000 holdup at a CBC employees' credit union Wednesday in which one guard was shot to death and another hurt.

But spokesman Normand Couillard said that police are investigating the possibility that the holdup is linked to the escape last week of convicted armed robber Michel Lafleur.

"There doesn't seem to be a link, but we'll check into it."

Lafleur pulled a handgun on his guards Aug. 9 while being transferred by van from one prison to another.

The robbery on Wednesday was committed by two hooded gunmen who entered the east-end Montreal headquarters of the CBC just as two guards, employees of Alliance Securite Blinde Ltee., were transferring money from the truck to the building.

One guard, 50-year-old Bernard Babeu, died instantly after being shot in the heart and thigh.

His partner, 21-year-old Roger Audet, was shot in the neck and side and is in critical condition in hospital.

The gunmen, one of them wounded, fled with a third accomplice and climbed into a taxi. They ordered the driver to let them off on nearby Champlain St., while a fourth person followed in a brown van.

The taxi driver was released shortly afterwards and the four disappeared in the van.

Oil spill damage lingers

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Crude oil slicks from a runaway Mexican oil well have already blackened nearly 32 kilometres of Texas beaches and will menace the Gulf of Mexico coast possibly as far north as Louisiana until autumn winds and tides begin, a top U.S. scientist said Thursday.

"The only thing coming up that will help us is the reversal of the currents and the northerly winds sometime in the fall," said John Robinson, scientific coordinator of the federal government force fighting the oil that has covered thousands of square kilometres in the western Gulf of Mexico.

More than nine kilometres of the multi-million-dollar resort beaches at South Padre Island at the tip of Texas were covered Thursday with a thick band of goo from the world's worst oil spill.

The Ixtoc I well near the Yucatan Peninsula has been spewing oil since June 3 at a rate of nearly 850,000 gallons a day, officials estimate. At that rate it passed 63 million gallons Thursday, 13 million gallons more than the world's previous worst spill, by the wrecked supertanker Amoco Cadiz on the French Brittany coast in 1978.

Local college students see new opportunity

by Linda Purschke

Students at Northwest Community College, along with other northern colleges, will get an opportunity to participate in courses normally only available to students at the British Columbia Institute of Technology (BCIT) Vancouver campus when live televised courses will be broadcast here in September.

"We're going to be using a new technology in educational delivery to reach students," said Gary Karlson, distance education co-ordinator for the college.

Karlson explained that six courses, three daytime and three evening, would be broadcast from BCIT to specially equipped classrooms at Northwest, via Anik-B satellite.

Anik-B allows two-way communications and Karlson said students will be able to ask questions as if they were sitting in a lecture room by using a long-distance phone system that will be beamed off the satellite.

The courses, said Karlson, were chosen "to bridge the geographical gap between specialized resources that are available in the Lower Mainland, but hard to get here."

One such course is Careers in the Hospitality and Tourism Industry, an introduction to the jobs available in the industry which will begin Oct. 1.

Reading and Study Skills, a course intended to improve the student's ability to read and study technical information more effectively will begin Sept. 2.

A course described as "a practical examination of the basic procedures and functions of construction company departments," entitled Construction Administration, will begin Oct. 3.

Forest utilization, an introduction to the manufacture of forest products and related topics will begin Sept. 6.

A course entitled Mining, which will discuss topics of concern to the industry, begins Sept. 7.

On Oct. 4, Refresher Modules for Graduate Nurses will be offered. This series of modules will discuss the latest medical findings in a variety of areas.

Karlson said some courses are available for credit toward BCIT diploma programs and said anyone wishing further information can contact him at the Northwest Community College at 635-6511.

POLICE NEWS

Terrace RCMP report Wayne Robert Brown faces charges of impaired driving and driving with a blood alcohol content over the legal limit.

Police said the charges were the result of a motor vehicle accident near Kleanza Creek Thursday and said Brown and two companions were found on the side of the road near the vehicle.

Police report a vehicle stolen from the Price-Skeena parking lot Wednesday was recovered Thursday in a gravel pit outside of Prince Rupert. Police said the vehicle was left unlocked with the keys in the ignition and was taken between 8 to 10 p.m. Police said there are no suspects at this time.

Hospital employees sit in

NANAIMO, B.C. (CP) — About 130 employees of Nanaimo Regional General Hospital continued a sit-in in the cafeteria Thursday while waiting for a labor relations board ruling on a grievance over the suspension of a 60-year-old cleaner.

Services at the hospital were cut back but not totally closed as the workers, members of the Hospital Employees Union, assigned members to some key posts.

However, garbage and laundry services have been cut since Tuesday and all elective surgery was cancelled Thursday.

Employees from housekeeping, dietary, medical records and maintenance were protesting the suspension of a cleaner who refused to go on garbage detail to replace a junior worker who was sick.

Housekeeping staff are not allowed to talk and they have orders not to discuss business with any nurse or even among themselves," Endres said.

John Nikituk, assistant administrator of the hospital, said the employees are involved in an illegal sit-in and the grievances should have been solved through a grievance procedure.

He said union representatives began meetings with a hospital official and members of the labor board Wednesday.

Dief planned to come north

WHITEHORSE (CP) — There is tragic irony, especially for northern Canadians, in the death Thursday of John George Diefenbaker.

The former Conservative prime minister was due to arrive in the Yukon capital today to participate in the official opening of the Dempster Highway, a project initiated by his government 20 years ago.

Construction of the 671-kilometre gravel road, running from near Dawson in the Yukon to Inuvik in the N.W.T., the first all-season land link to the Arctic, was launched in 1959 as part of Diefenbaker's "northern vision."

Since then, he has become a folk hero in the north, the ranking politician from any party, a man loved and respected perhaps more so than anywhere else in the country for his determination to open up the region.

Jack Epp, minister of Indian and northern affairs, in the midst of a northern tour highlighted by the highway opening, said Thursday that Diefenbaker had made "an historic contribution to the Canada of the north and to native peoples."

"The Dempster is the realization of Mr. Diefenbaker's vision and its opening Saturday will be a tribute to him," Epp said.

Chris Pearson, Yukon government leader, noted that Diefenbaker was the first prime minister to say that the sprawling territory north of the 60th parallel should be developed.

Diefenbaker's roads to resources program, an accelerated road construction project, resulted in the building of 2,500 miles of top-grade highway in the Yukon over 10 years.

Northerners had eagerly awaited the 83-year-old Diefenbaker's arrival to take part in the ceremony, as had government officials anxious to add a human touch to the program.

Epp had extended the invitation some weeks ago.

"You won't find a flag not flying at half mast and you'd be hard-pressed to find a single person who would say anything against Mr. Diefenbaker," said Pearson.

Diefenbaker said in a recent interview that his northern vision program had been ridiculed at the time by the Liberal opposition who berated him for trying to "build roads from igloo to igloo."

But he insisted the project had enabled northern development to speed ahead, especially in the area of natural resources.

Public Works Minister Eric Nielsen, who has represented the Yukon for 20 years, said he plans to attend the highway opening ceremony before returning to Ottawa for Diefenbaker's funeral.

Epp is also expected to cut short his tour.

College sets fall programs

Northwest Community College plans for the fall Adult Education Program are now underway.

Kathy Mueller, co-ordinator for community education, said both day and evening classes will be offered in Terrace.

"During the month of August we are looking for both instructors and ideas for courses which meet the needs of the people of Terrace," said Mueller.

Mueller asked anyone interested in requesting a course or sharing skills to phone her at Northwest Community College

WEATHER

Terrace weather office predicts today's weather should be cloudy with sunny periods.

Highs are expected to reach 24 degrees Celsius, with lows falling to 13 degrees.

Didn't turn otter cheek

BREMERTON, Wash. (AP) — A five-year-old San Diego boy was savagely attacked by an otter and suffered bites that required more than 200 stitches.

The Washington department of fish and game set traps for the otter, which wildlife experts say could have been a female protecting her pups or a cranky, old male which had been irritated by barking dogs. The animal remains at large.

While otters are commonly seen in Kitsap Lake, attacks by otters on human beings are rare, said Dr. Albert Erickson, professor of wildlife with the University of Washington.

Diefenbaker remembered for speeches

John Diefenbaker was known as the master of barb — one of the most adept at the art of slicing the political jugular.

His reputation for eloquence brought invitations by the thousands from public groups seeking a keynote speaker. $50,000 of some of his comments about:

HIS OPPONENTS: "Have you ever seen him kiss a farmer?" referring to Pierre Elliott Trudeau's "kissing campaign" of 1968.

"The master of osculation (kissing) called Parliament back so he could kiss it goodbye," when Trudeau dissolved Parliament for the 1968 election.

"In the days of King, St. Laurent, Pearson and I (his two predecessors and his successor), we paid for our own cars," objecting to the Trudeau government's purchase of two $80,000 Cadillacs while the Liberals called for energy conservation.

"No party can stand for something when it carries a banner carrying the design of 'me too,'" of Robert Stanfield, then Conservative leader, on Diefenbaker's 80th birthday in 1975.

"You can't have a real Parliament when you have a third party with a leader who belched fire and brimstone before this sitting, then having met with his pride of lions in caucus, becomes a cooing dove," September, 1973, of David Lewis, then NDP leader.

"The House of Commons has become a mental hospital operated by its own inmates," June 10, 1972, after procedural wrangles had halted most Commons business that day.

"He has been guilty of an articulate lack of skill," of Dalton Camp, national party leader who sought a leadership review that led to the 1966 leadership convention, Diefenbaker's downfall.

"When you have government that tries to turn a banana into a backbone, you can understand some of the uncertainties of the past two years," in a 1965 campaign speech, referring to Lester Pearson, prime minister at the time.

HIS CAREER: "I am still making history," after losing the Conservative leadership to Stanfield in 1967.

"Any accolades that come my way embarrass me," in 1976 on his 36th anniversary in Parliament. "I have not often been embarrassed."

"A man coming into Parliament should always clash with the man at the top. . . No one ever made a name by exercising his debating strength against the weak," on his 69th birthday in 1964.

He had many offers to return to work as a trial lawyer "but I've appointed so many of the judges I feel it would be indiscreet to appear before them," when he turned 74.

"Don't get me started on history because then you shall know the meaning of eternity," said frequently of his love of storytelling.

"I will make mistakes, but I hope it will be said of me when I give up the highest honor that you can confer on any man, as was said of another in public service: 'He wasn't always right; sometimes he was on the wrong side, but never on the side of wrong,'" when he accepted the Conservative leadership in 1955.

"I'd never have been prime minister if the Gallup polls had had their way," in Lethbridge, Alta., in 1962.

"Never campaign . . . I just visit with the people," in 1965 at a campaign picnic.

"They say I've made mistakes, you know. But they've been mistakes of the heart," at a party gathering in 1963.

"My friends, you say: 'Give 'em hell John!' I never do that. I tell the truth and it sounds like hell. It simply sounds that way to the Grits," in Moncton in 1963.

ROYALTY: "This government won't be satisfied until all semblance of royalty is in the garbage can," part of his successful attempt to reverse a policy that would have substituted the word "Police" for "RCMP" on cars and buildings.

"Both the people who are silent and in the majority should stand up for the monarchy and stop the surreptitious chiselling away under the table against the things that through the generations have been upheld by Scots everywhere," in 1969 to St. Andrew's Society members.

HIS COUNTRY: I have never seen it as divided as it is today," during an Aug. 10, 1979, CTV interview.

"Suspicion, fear, all these things that deny unity are present."

"Sir John A. Macdonald gave his life to his party. He opened the West. He saw Canada from east to west. I see a new Canada — a Canada of the North," in Winnipeg, 1958.

"We in Canada believe that good fences are necessary," introducing the late U.S. president John F. Kennedy at a joint sitting of the Commons and the Senate in 1961.

"There are great interests against us — national and international — but the people of Canada have an appointment with destiny," in Port Hope, Ont., 1963.

"I am the first prime minister of this country of neither altogether English nor French origin. So I determined to bring about a Canadian citizenship that knew no hyphenated consideration," March, 1958.

HIS CHILDHOOD: "This is no novelty to me," in 1962 when some women of the radical Doukhobor Sons of Freedom sect stripped off their clothes at a political meeting. "I was raised on a homestead in Saskatchewan and that's why I know what those things are."

The Right Honorable John Diefenbaker

Dief was always the 'Chief'

By JAMES JOHNSTON

Somehow we might have expected the Old Chief to have dropped in a ferocious battle against a fire-breathing dragon. We long suspected that he hoped the end would come on his beloved Parliament Hill.

Instead he quietly slipped away in his own den. For once, John Diefenbaker was not able to do it his way.

Some years ago I heard him say: "I wish I could live another 50 years just to see how it all turns out."

We thought he would.

I talked with John Diefenbaker Wednesday at noon and shall always treasure that fact. He was full of his usual fire and his ideas danced around the globe.

He talked of Lusaka and Rhodesia and just as easily swung to the size of the federal deficit. There was excitement over his September visit to China.

In a few days he was going to northern Canada to open a new road and I asked him joshingly if it was an "igloo to igloo" highway — the term the Liberals used for the road to resources program introduced when he was prime minister.

"They used to laugh," he growled. "Damn Grits!"

As the conversation ended with a "see you soon" I never expected it would be never.

And in common with thousands of Canadians to whom he seemed like a father or grandfather, I can think of a hundred things I intended to tell him, a thousand yarns he will never laugh at.

John Diefenbaker treasured his friendships and he kept them alive all across this country. He gave so many Canadians a glimpse of greatness, a sharing in the pleasures and triumph of seeing things and doing things through him which they would never see or do themselves.

He stayed at Windsor Castle. The Queen made him a Companion of Honor. He knew Churchill, De Gaulle, Eisenhower. But he never forgot that as a boy on the prairies, it was Louis Riel's Metis military commander Gabriel Dumont who taught him how to shoot a rifle.

He missed his beloved wife, Olive, who always stood by his side. He'd telephone her throughout the day. She was as strong as he was. Recently, he was able to laugh at the memories of some of her stories. So, too, with mention of his brother Elmer, whom he always credited with helping him to continue school.

Dief had a long memory but he did not hold grudges once the differences were settled. Many good men were inadvertently involved in the terrible debacle of 1966 when a few small men backed down the Chief and left a shattered Conservative party. Dief had long since let bygones be bygones with those who made amends, but he never forgave those with blood on their hands.

What do I remember of John Diefenbaker?

Courage. "I don't walk through side doors," he said as he strode into a hostile crowd. Then as the hooligans threatened to clout the 68-year-old prime minister, "You lay one hand on me and I'll give you the worst trimming of your life."

Laughter. Loud, raucous, wild, uncontrolled laughter and fun, a super and devastating sense of mimicry which ranged from Lester Pearson to Winston Churchill to Jack Pickersgill to Jackie Kennedy.

Integrity. "How were you ever able to put up with 50 years of dealing with those bastards?" I once asked. "Well," he said, "always be able to tell them to go to hell. But never let the bastards — that is your word, not mine — never let the bastards ever get to you."

Cunning. "I will just say enough in the House to get the Grits going, and they will not know what I intend to do."

Humor. . . or just plain devilment. In the midst of a Liberal crisis, a Liberal cabinet minister's car mysteriously sprouted a sticker. "Don't Blame Me — I Voted Conservative." The minister reached his car in front of the Parliament building, glowered at it, looked up at Diefenbaker's office window and shook his fist. And who was watching but the Chief who had inspired the gag.

Intelligence. . . John Diefenbaker could read a book a full page at a time. He could go through a complicated legal or economic report in a few hours, then deliver a key speech in the house.

Memory. . . like an elephant's. Just after moving to Cobourg, I passed on some sage remarks from one of the local philosophers that were critical of the Chief. "Who told you that?" he stormed. When I refused to say, he paused. "Wait a minute," he said. "It sounds like Bob Neill." It was.

John Diefenbaker was a sensitive man but he tried not to show it. Late in 1967, a few days after he has been ousted from the Tory leadership, the crowds, including dozens of children, gathered around him at Expo in Montreal. He wiped a tear from his eye. "I thought they would have forgotten me."

He was always surprised that his friends loved him for what he was. Out of office, he could do nothing for them — or so he thought — but he did everything for them just by being Dief.

It is a day of sadness. But it is also a day of happy memories — the memories of the old Chief who put his country and his people first.

By this afternoon, he will have called on St. Peter and told him how he wants Heaven to be run.

James Johnston, national director of the Progressive Conservative party in the Diefenbaker years, was one of the last persons to talk to the Chief before his death. Now publisher of Cobourg Star and Port Hope Guide, he draws a highly personal and affectionate picture of his friend.

Diefenbaker's political life

OTTAWA (CP) — Harsh political partisanship marked much of John Diefenbaker's period as prime minister from 1957 to 1963.

That was a generation that played the game that way. It was a product too of the personalities of some of the main players. And it was the issues.

The Diefenbaker years produced solid legislation ranging from resource development to social benefits, penal reform and more money for the provinces.

He fought with Joey Smallwood of Newfoundland over money and the attempted use of the RCMP in a bitter logging strike, with the late W.A.C. Bennett of British Columbia over power development of the Columbia River and with T.C. (Tommy) Douglas of Saskatchewan about a lot of things.

Canada-U.S. relations soured once the young John F. Kennedy appeared. In fact, the dispute about accepting American nuclear arms on Canadian soil became the issue dominating the 1962 election and the final defeat in 1963.

But from the start, his most consistent problem as manoeuvred by a relatively tiny opposition was the economy, relatively healthy by today's statistics.

Liberals cried foul in 1957 when the newly-elected man from Saskatchewan flourished what he called a secret Liberal forecast predicting on the eve of its own defeat serious economic troubles. The ailment survived to plague him.

The early flamboyant act was a Diefenbaker special of noholds-barred politics by a man who played to win and had often lost.

He first ran for the Commons in 1925, finally getting there in 1940, and it was his durable joke that the only protection for a Conservative in the Saskatchewan of that period was the game laws.

He had, after all, cut his teeth fighting the Liberal machine of the long-time federal agriculture minister, James G. (Jimmy) Gardner, and he had the scars to prove it.

The Commons atmosphere also owed at least something to the acrimony coloring the final days of the 22-year Liberal reign, notably the pipeline debate of 1956. Commons decorum had been ravaged by Opposition reaction to procedure to authorize financing of the Americans — the "Texas Buccaneers" — promoting the first trans-Canada natural gas line.

Another factor was the personal animosity that festered and grew between Diefenbaker and the new Liberal leader, Lester Pearson, named after Diefenbaker's minority government win of 1957. Pearson got the Nobel Peace Prize that year for his role in the UN settlement of the Suez Canal crisis caused by the invasion of Britain and France.

But there was rarely to be peace between the two men thereafter.

Against this background, Diefenbaker in 1958 won a record majority with 208 Progressive Conservative MPs to only 48 Liberals, eight Co-operative Commonwealth Federation (CCF) MPs and one Liberal-Labor.

It was sweet triumph. But the very size of the majority over the next four years made it hard to keep them all busy.

They were confronted by the "Four Horsemen" of the depleted Liberal ranks and the decimated CCF group led by Saskatchewan farmer Hazen Argue, now a Liberal senator.

Outmanned, the Opposition perfected a steady drumfire of criticism quick to attack misuses and economic setbacks.

The Four Horsemen were led by Pearson, a parliamentary novice, after being prime minister from 1963 to 1968. There was Paul Martin, an MP since 1935 and now stepping down as High Commissioner to Britain; J.W. Pickersgill, former minister and now retired; and Lionel Chevrier, another veteran minister still active with Nordair.

They had ammunition, starting with the still-controversial Diefenbaker decision in 1959 to scrap the Avro Arrow military aircraft.

The jobless rate in 1957 was 4.6 per cent, high for Canada and the times. It reached seven per cent in 1958 and a peak of 7.1 per cent in 1961 before starting to drop.

At the same time, implementation of Progressive Conservative election promises brought a federal spending deficit in 1958 and it stayed.

That first deficit was tiny by the standards of the one forecast this year of $11.7 billion. It was only $609 million but it was contrary to the financial orthodoxy of many economists including the governor of the Bank of Canada, James Coyne.

The Coyne affair pitted his widely-broadcast arguments for restraint against government policy of expansion.

Coyne resigned in 1961 after the Liberal-dominated Senate stalled Commons legislation to fire him but it was an emotional, politically-sensitive episode that hurt a government frayed around the edges.

Diefenbaker was accused of dithering in the face of a need for hard decisions. The Opposition labored on. Some parliamentary sessions wound up in the sticky Ottawa heat of August, in the pre-air-conditioning period, with marathon day-and-night sessions.

It all took a toll. The Diefenbaker record majority evaporated in 1962 to a minority government that lost in 1963, its cabinet solidarity shattered on the issue of whether to put nuclear warheads on American-built defence missiles based in Canada.

It was no help in the 1962 campaign that at mid-point, the Canadian dollar had to be devalued to 92.5 cents in U.S. funds and a flood of mocking "Diefen-dollar" propaganda ensued. Analysts said investors had lost confidence in Canada; Diefenbaker remained convinced it was a conspiracy.

By comparison, Pierre Trudeau's Liberals went into the May 22 election defending higher jobless rates, much higher deficits, a dollar that for months had hovered at anywhere from 83 to 86 cents American — plus unrelentingly high rates of inflation.

They lost too.

A GOOD FRIEND TO THE BRITISH

LONDON (Reuter) — British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said Thursday she was most distressed to learn of John Diefenbaker's death.

"He will long be remembered in this country as a good friend of Britain, as a Commonwealth statesman and as a great Canadian," she said in a message sent to Prime Minister Clark.

DEATH OVERSHADOWS MEET

Premiers discuss economy, tax shelters

POINTE-AU-PIC, Que. (CP) — The death of former prime minister John Diefenbaker overshadowed the start of the 29th annual conference of provincial premiers here Thursday.

After paying tribute to "The Chief," which obliged some premiers to swallow their political and even personal antagonisms, the conference buckled down to the first of three business sessions.

Behind closed doors, the premiers discussed economic issues with an eye to the federal-provincial conference of first ministers on the economy scheduled for November.

Like his colleagues, Ontario Premier William Davis, leadoff-speaker, spoke to reporters of a general agreement among the premiers on several economic issues.

But besides mentioning that all the provinces agree on the important role the federal government has to play to combat inflation and unemployment, few premiers cared to be more specific on the areas of agreement when they broke up for lunch.

However, the premiers endorsed a proposal by Nova Scotia Premier John Buchanan calling for more tax shelters for industry and a general loosening of the tax system to help the poorer provinces attract investors.

Buchanan, who led off discussion on tax policy, said the tax shelter system has been used to great advantage for oil and gas exploration and for the production of Canadian

But that hasn't done much to help the Atlantic provinces, and tax shelters should be extended to sectors such as fisheries, he told his colleagues.

He proposed a 150-per-cent tax write-off on investment in slow-growth regions, while underlining the need for co-operation between Ottawa and the provinces to make tax policy an effective tool of economic development.

Saskatchewan Premier Allan Blakeney said: "We're apprehensive there may be employment problems more serious than we now have because of the real possibility of a recession in the U.S. and of it spreading to Canada."

He added: "There is a general belief we should be exercising care in spending on the current account in hopes of reducing deficits."

"We felt we should take steps to see that we reduce governmental deficits on the current account, and yet not shut down all governmental operations which might stimulate the economy."

"We're strongly of the view that we as Canadians should be spending money to create assets which we know we need — assets largely of a self-liquidating kind such as railway lines, terminals to serve the West Coast better and energy projects such as pipelines which will create assets for tomorrow and which will provide employment for Canadians in the months ahead," he said.

Premier Richard Hatfield took a break from what he termed a "dull" meeting to breathe some of the salt air of this cliff-side resort perched above the St. Lawrence River 130 kilometres northeast of Quebec City.

"It's almost like a rehearsal for the upcoming federal meeting on economic matters," he said.

Resignation still leaves questions

UNITED NATIONS (CP) — The official explanation of Andrew Young's resignation as United States ambassador to the UN leaves a number of questions unanswered.

On the face of it, Young held a brief and unauthorized discussion with Zehdi Terzi, the Palestinian Liberation Organization representative at the UN and then lied about the meeting to the state department and State Secretary Cyrus Vance.

At first, Young said the meeting was accidental and the discussion was limited to small talk. Later, when another version of the incident was leaked, apparently by Yehuda Boum, Israel's ambassador to the UN, Young admitted that he and Terzi spent about 30 minutes talking over a resolution due to come before the Security Council.

Young then tendered his resignation.

However, there are several things not explained.

For instance, Milton Wolf, the U.S. ambassador to Austria, is reported to have had three meetings with a PLO official, two by accident and one by design. That brought no rebuke from the state department, only a caution about such meetings being against policy.

The U.S. policy is that there should be no negotiation with the PLO until the organization recognizes Israel's right to exist. Despite this, there have been several instances of indirect contact between the U.S. and the PLO through the good offices of Kuwait.

Young's meeting with Terzi, in fact, occurred in the home of the Kuwaiti ambassador to the UN.

The fateful meeting came at a crucial point. The Security Council was due to vote on an important Palestinian resolution. It tacitly accepted Israel's right to exist but called for establishment of a Palestinian state.

As Young explained it, the U.S. could not support the resolution without provoking an explosion from Israel. It could not veto it without serious repercussions in the Arab world and abstaining would have alienated both sides.

So Young, in what he describes as a technically proper action, worked out an encounter with Terzi. As it happened, the vote on the resolution was postponed.

To Israel, the meeting was a betrayal of U.S. policy and a treacherous move against Middle East peace.

The question arises, though, as to how the truth of the meeting came out. One explanation is that Young told Blum about his talk with Terzi while, at the same time, he was lying to his superiors. That, at best, seems odd.

Published reports claim Israeli intelligence agents bugged the meeting, a flagrant abuse of American hospitality and law. Israel denies the charge but Young said he would not be surprised if the meeting turned out to have been the target of eavesdroppers.

Did Young in fact overstep his authority in what he thought was a good cause? Did he meet Terzi with the tacit approval of Washington and then get caught by an Israeli bug? Is he a scapegoat to Israeli suspicions about their superpower patron?

He himself does not seem inclined to comment on such questions, maintaining his loyalty to President Carter and pledging to work for his re-election. Under the circumstances, though, they seem to be fair questions.

B.C. BRIEFS

VANCOUVER (CP) — Forest Industrial Relations said today it will apply to the provincial labor relations board to stop study sessions planned by tradesmen for Aug. 23-24.

FIR president Keith Bennett said the industry bargaining agent will make its application this week or early next week.

A minority group of tradesmen represented by the International Woodworkers of America, the Pulp, Paper and Woodworkers of Canada and Canadian Paperworkers Union have formed their own association to press for an adjustment of their wage rates on top of the industry-wide settlement. The tradesmen have filed earlier study sessions in their bid to seek parity with benchmark.

Bennett said the background of the dispute is that benchmark, who are responsible for maintenance of saws, received a higher rate than other maintenance trades prior to 1974. In negotiations that year, tradesmen got parity with benchmark but Bennett said an error was made in that settlement.

Under the new agreement, benchmark received $12.16 an hour from June 15, increasing to $13.32 the same date next year. Tradesmen got $11.76 June 15, increasing to $12.88 next year.

Ferry needs some work

VICTORIA (CP) — The ferry Queen of Alberni which ran aground in Active Pass last week might be out of service twice as long as expected, Highway Minister Alex Fraser said today.

The minister said damage to engines might be more extensive than originally feared and it could be two months instead of one month before the vessel is back in service.

Fraser said the government has been unable to find a suitable replacement vessel to take up the slack while the Alberni is in drydock.

And while the Alberni is out of service, ferry officials have reported increased traffic loads.

Betty Nicholson, B.C. Ferries information officer, reports that passenger traffic in July increased 9.9 per cent over the same month in 1978. Vehicle traffic was up 12.5 per cent for the same period.

Tourism Minister Don Phillips said the Princess Marguerite carried 90,000 passengers in its Seattle-Victoria run in July, a 22.8-per-cent increase over the same month in 1978.

Prisoner to go back in

PRINCE GEORGE, B.C. (CP) — Walter Rorison, an escaped prisoner from the Lower Mainland Regional Correctional Centre, was arrested Wednesday in this central Interior city.

RCMP said Rorison, 39, was charged with theft. No other details were released. Rorison was serving a term for break and enter, and assault when he escaped from the Burnaby prison

No forgetting the neglected promises

CRANBROOK, B.C. (CP) — M.L.A. Terry Segary has been criticized by the Kootenay Secondary Mills Association for not living up to promises he made during the provincial election campaign.

Eugene Schmidt, association vice-president, Wednesday accused Segary (SC-Kootenay) of betraying smaller logging operators. Schmidt said the MLA has changed his stand in regard to the offering of timber.

"A July 19 press release clearly shows Segary has misused the small operators' trust by promising us timber before the election to get our votes," said Schmidt, "and then after elected, he says . . . it's not in the best interest of the major mills."

Schmidt said the Forest Act states that timber must be advertised for sale and sold by public auction — and that hasn't happened.

He said timber is not being sold by public competition and has been provided to major mills while smaller operators aren't allowed to bid.

"Big mills wanted all the standing timber and got it on a non-public competition basis," Schmidt said. "Small operators wanted a little of the standing timber and got nothing."

"We weren't allowed access at any price. Instead, after the big mills got through falling and taking all the prime timber — smashing and leaving junk — small operators were allowed to clean up."

Schmidt added that only the leftovers were advertised for sale and sold by public competition and "only salvage was available."

Lethbridge Little Leaguers move into Canadian finals

LETHBRIDGE, Alta. (CP) — Lethbridge Lakeside advanced to the final of the Canadian Little League baseball championships with a 6-3 victory over Lethbridge Norcrest Thursday.

Norcrest, the Prairie champions, had needed a win to force a four-team playoff Friday. The championship game will be played Saturday.

In Thursday's other game, Quebec edged the Maritimes 3-2 to earn a berth in a sudden-death playoff Friday against British Columbia for the right to meet Lakeside for the national title.

B.C., represented by Vancouver, and Quebec, represented by Sherbrooke, both finished with 3-2 records. Norcrest and the Maritimes, represented by Saint John, N.B., both at 2-3, were eliminated.

Lakeside finished the round-robin tournament with a 4-1 record, while Thunder

Bay, the Ontario entry with a 1-4 record, was the first team to be eliminated.

In the Lakeside-Norcrest contest, the winners scored five times in the second inning on just two hits and three Norcrest errors.

Glen Oliver went all the way for Lakeside. He allowed seven hits, struck out two and walked three.

Paul Bohnert had the loss, giving up nine hits while walking two and fanning five.

Greg Boras paced the Lakeside attack with a home run and a single. Kevin Virgilio added two singles.

Bruce Harvie had a triple and single for Norcrest.

Quebec, meanwhile, scored what proved to be the winning run in the bottom of the fourth inning against the Maritimes. Quebec got a double off the bat of right fielder Marco Guillemette to open the inning. He advanced to third on a passed ball and scored on a sacrifice fly by Francois Desbiens.

Jacques Gagne, with relief help from Sylvain Cloutier, was the winner. He tossed a five-hitter, striking out eight.

Scott Chaddwick was the loser. He went four innings and gave up all three Quebec runs. Mike Royal finished

Zorn has found his niche

SEATTLE (AP) — With his strong position on religion and his rise from a free agent to fame and fortune as quarterback of Seattle Seahawks, Jim Zorn has been dubbed the Magic Christian.

That sobriquet might offend people who aren't aware of Zorn's tenacious posture on religion, but it fits him perfectly.

As a National Football League quarterback, Zorn has achieved star status and a $250,000-a-season, five-year contract despite a small-college career that attracted little professional attention.

As a human being, he has achieved peace and tranquility through faith in God and Jesus Christ, and he's eager to take his message to the public.

Zorn is 26, young by professional football quarterbacking standards. He says he has been a devout Christian since he was a high school senior at Cerritos, Calif.

FOUR AHEAD

Pirates steal away

Pittsburgh extended its first-place lead in the National League East Division to four games Thursday night as Omar Moreno's two-run single sparked a three-run fourth inning and helped the Pirates defeat San Diego Padres 5-4.

It extended Pittsburgh's winning streak to six games and moved them another half-game ahead of runner-up Montreal Expos, who were idle.

Gene Tenace hit a two-run homer in the first inning of the baseball game off Pittsburgh starter Bruce Kison.

However, the Pirates scored an unearned run in the bottom of the first off Gaylord Perry, 10-10, who also yielded the three Pittsburgh runs in the fourth.

In another National League game, Alex Trevino singled to deliver the tie-breaking run and Joel Youngblood added a two-run double as New York Mets scored five runs in the eighth inning to defeat Atlanta Braves 6-3.

Doug Flynn opened the inning with a double but was thrown out at third when pinch-hitter Gil Flores bunted back to the mound. Frank Taveras followed with a bunt single, then Trevino scored Flores with his hit to centre. Taveras also scored on the play when outfielder Barry Bonnell's throw was wild.

Lee Mazzilli walked and John Stearns reached on a fielder's choice when pitcher Phil Niekro, 15-16, fielded his bunt and threw too late to get Trevino at the plate. Youngblood's two-run double followed.

Steve Garvey drove a two-run single up the middle with two out in the 15th inning, giving Los Angeles Dodgers a 4-2 victory over St. Louis Cardinals for a sweep of their three-game series.

Jerry Martin drove in four runs with his 16th home run, a double and a single, leading an extra-base hit barrage which carried Chicago Cubs to a 14-4 victory over San Francisco Giants.

Eleven of Chicago's 17 hits were for extra bases including nine doubles in support of Lynn McGlothen, 10-8, while Bob Knepper, 8-8, took the loss.

Todd Cruz drove in two Kansas City runs with a sacrifice fly and a homer, and Baltimore mistakes led to two more as the Royals defeated the Orioles 4-2 in an American League game.

Cruz, a .205 hitter with nine previous runs batted in this season, hit a sacrifice fly in the second inning and lined his second homer of the season in the sixth off Dennis Martinez, 14-9.

Bob Watson drove in four runs with his 150th career homer and a single, and American League leader Fred Lynn belted his 35th home run as Boston Red Sox beat Chicago White Sox 7-5.

Watson hit a two-run shot, his 11th of the season, to tie the game 4-4 in the fourth inning. In the fifth, he singled home the lead run off Mike Proly, 1-5.

Lynn slammed a solo homer into the right-field bleachers in the second and Butch Hobson hit his 21st of the year in the sixth, giving Boston 17 homers in the last six games.

Lynn, whose homer was his ninth in the last 12 games, extended his hitting streak to 18. Carl Yastrzemski added two singles to move within 17 hits of the 3,000 mark.

Ken Landreaux singled home one run and scored the other in Minnesota's two-run sixth inning and Geoff Zahn beat New York for the third time this season as the Twins downed the Yankees 5-1.

Gorman Thomas doubled home two runs in a three-run Milwaukee first inning and Larry Sorensen scattered eight hits, leading the Brewers to a 4-1 victory over slumping Texas Rangers.

The defeat was the fifth in a row for the Rangers, who are 8-22 since the all-star break.

DAILY HERALD

Desalle tops show but still uncommitted

SASKATOON (CP) — Philip Desalle of Victoria, the centre piece at the Western Canada Summer Games gymnastic competition, is pondering how much longer he wants to be one of Canada's ranking gymnasts.

"That's one of my problems right now, having to make up my mind how much longer I want to go on, if I want to go on to 1980 or 1982."

Desalle, a member of the 1976 Olympic team, led the competition Thursday after preliminary results in the pommel horse and floor exercises in what was a comparatively quiet day.

Along with the first day of gymnastics, swimming, soccer, archery and modern pentathlon events got under way and yachting moved into its third day.

Desalle scored 9.45 on the floor exercise, trailed by Saskatoon's James Rozon with 9.15 and Victoria's Owen Walstrom with 0.10. But he commanded a bigger lead in the pommel, his specialty, scoring 9.75, while Allan Reddon of Edmonton was second with 8.35. Dave Babby of Victoria was third with 8.0. Preliminary competition continues today with the finals slated for Saturday.

"I haven't competed since the Nationals so its more for me to come up for this because I haven't done anything for three or four months now," said Desalle. "It's kind of nice just to go in here and maybe have a little fun."

Desalle is pondering his future. "I want to see what happens at the world championships at Fort Worth in December and after that I'll pretty well know what I'm going to do from there."

Bradley defends her win

PLYMOUTH, Ind. (AP) — Pat Bradley defends the championship she won here last year in a strong field that has six of the top 10 money-winners on the 1979 Ladies Professional Golf Association tour playing in this week's $100,000 tournament.

Bradley is winless in 1979, but the 28-year-old former New Hampshire women's champion has been playing consistent golf and is third behind Nancy Lopez and Sandra Post in earnings on the tour this year with $107,376.

Lopez, who is not playing in as many tournaments this year as she did in winning the LPGA's Player of the Year award in 1978, isn't entered here. Post, of Oakville, Ont., withdrew Wednesday because of illness.

This is the sixth year the women's tour has stopped at the Plymouth Country Club. However, the tournament's name has been changed from the Hoosier Classic to the Barth Classic since last year.

The sponsor has made it possible to raise the purse from last year's $60,000.

Bradley's challengers on the 6,156-yard, par-72 course include veteran Jane Blalock, a four-time winner in 1979 who has added $100,930 to her earnings and is closing in on the $700,000 figure in all-time winnings on the tour.

Veteran Judy Rankin, who found the elusive winning touch for the first time this year on Monday in a rain-delayed tournament, is also in the field of 89 pros seeking the top prize of $15,000.

He said he wants to put on a strong performance at Fort Worth because he missed the world championship last year, falling ill two days before the meet.

"I think the only thing that would make me really decide to retire would be maybe having a really bad meet (at Fort Worth) ... I'm just like that. If I have a bad meet I get depressed."

There had been speculation that Desalle would unveil his new pommel routine for the 1980 Olympics, but the gymnast said that was news to him. However, spectators will get a preview of his world championship performances.

"Some of the routines I'm doing here are for the world."

After the first round of women's archery competition, Victoria's Wanda Allen lead after 36 arrows with 279 points, Regina's Debbie Rutkowski was second with 269 and Saskatoon's Bev Parent was in a tie for third with Nancy Lovo of Calgary with 267 points.

Pete Lehman, of Taber, Alta., lead the men's archery after 72 arrows with 537 points; Dave Mann of Vancouver was second with 528 and Victoria's Vesa Myllyniemi was third, one point behind Mann.

The top Manitoba archer was former Progressive Conservative MP Dean Whiteway, in 13th spot with 438 points. Whiteway, competing in his first tournament, lost his Selkirk riding in the May 22 federal election.

Borg on win streak

TORONTO (CP) — Top-seeded Bjorn Borg of Sweden continued his stretch run to the men's singles final of the Players' International Canadian Open tennis championships with a 6-2, 6-4 win over 19-year-old Yannick Noah of France in a third-round match Thursday.

"I knew I had to play well to beat him and that's exactly what I did," Borg said following the centre-court match at the York University Tennis Centre, home of the $210,000 Grand Prix event.

"I've watched him play in many tournaments, although I've never played him before," Borg said of Noah, who was discovered by Arthur Ashe in Cameroon when the American tennis star held a clinic in that African country in 1971.

"I think I played a good match," Noah said. "But against Borg you have to play so much better. He plays the important shots so well."

In the deciding second set, Borg broke Noah at love in the third game and Noah broke the Swede in the eighth game to tie the set at 4-4. But the emotionless Borg came right back in the fifth game to break the Frenchman's serve, then held his own to win the match.

In other third-round matches Thursday, fourth-seeded American Vitas Gerulaitis beat David Schneider of South Africa, 6-4, 6-2; Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia defeated Tom Okker of the Netherlands 6-2, 6-1; Paul Kronk of Australia downed Eric Van Dillen of the U.S., 6-3, 6-0; Wojtek Fibak of Poland beat Butch Walts of the U.S., 6-2, 6-1; seventh-seeded Gene Mayer of the U.S. downed American Brian Teacher 3-6, 6-3, 7-6, and Australia's Phil Dent beat Andrew Pattison of the U.S. 6-4, 7-5.

Borg said he has to become more aggressive and thinks that will come as he plays more matches on the synthetic surface here, the same surface on which the Swede will contest the U.S. Open in two weeks at Flushing Meadows, N.Y.

"I think I'll become more confident the more I play on this type of court," Borg said, which can only spell bad news for the other competitors in the men's draw.

Lendl, a 19-year-old right-hand from Prague, had little trouble defeating the 35-year-old Okker. Lendl was the world's top under-18 player in 1978 and was undefeated in the four major championships he contested — the 1977 Orange Bowl, when he defeated Noah in the final, and the Italian, French and Wimbledon junior events.

The women's semi-finalists were decided Thursday and with the exception of Brigitte Cuypers of South Africa, it'll be an all-American affair.

In quarter-final play, seventh-seeded Pam Teeguarden beat Mary Carillo of the U.S., 6-0, 6-2; Cuypers downed Kay McDaniel of the U.S., 6-0, 6-3; Diane Desfor upended Chris O'Neil of Australia, 4-6, 6-0, 6-3 and Laura Dupont defeated fellow American Lea Antonoplis, 6-2, 7-6.

Desfor will play Dupont and Cuypers takes on Teeguarden in semi-final play today. The women's draw, which has its final scheduled for Saturday, lost its top women's seed, Evonne Goolagong-Cawley, when the Australian had to withdraw from the tournament Wednesday because of a recurring back ailment.

SHOW STUNS THEIR RIVALS

BUDAPEST (AP) — Stunning their favored European rivals, Robert Nieman of Hinsdale, Ill., and two other United States athletes Thursday won the individual and team titles in the world modern pentathlon championships.

Nieman, a 32-year-old architect, won the individual title with a total of 5,483 points in the five events — riding, fencing, pistol-shooting, swimming and running.

The American team of Nieman, John Fitzgerald of Skokie, Ill., and Mike Burley of Berea, Ohio, clinched the team championship with a total of 15,976 points.

Burley won the concluding event, a 4,000-metre cross-country race over the rolling countryside near Budapest's Pestihegykut sports airport.

Second over-all was Polish Olympic champion Janusz Pieciak with 5,467 points. Third was Italy's Daniele Masala with 5,423.

In the team competition, the United States edged the favored Hungarians by only seven points.

Like a dozen or so other competitors, Nieman, who completed the 4,000-metre run in 14 minutes, 1.9 seconds, briefly collapsed at the finish.

Jack Alexander of Sarnia, Ont., ran the ninth fastest time of the day — 13:04.3 — to lift the Canadian squad to 12th of 20 teams for the day.

However, Canada advanced over-all just one place — to 18th — with 13,141 points, beating only Denmark (12,525) and Egypt (11,277).

Nice Graham touch a winner in tourney

HARRISON, N.Y. (AP) — David Graham, still possessing the delicate putting touch that won the PGA national golf championship, stroked a six-under-par 65 and established a three-stroke lead Thursday in the first round of the $400,000 Westchester Classic.

"I really thought I'd have a little bit of a problem playing this week," said the slender, articulate Australian who has had little chance to practice since his playoff triumph in the PGA two weeks ago.

"My swing didn't feel all that great," he said. "I was a little over-relaxed from (the) PGA at Oakland Hills."

"But," he continued, "I putted very, very well."

Graham one-putted nine times and made three par-saving putts of about eight to 10 feet which he called "the backbone of the round."

"If I didn't make them, it would have been a very ordinary round."

As it was, he escaped without a bogey on the hilly, 6,603-yard Westchester Country Club course in suburban New York which played much more difficult than usual in the brisk, cool breezes.

Mac McLendon was alone in second at 68, three strokes under par.

A four-wood second shot and a 12-foot putt produced an eagle-three for Tom Watson and helped him to a round of 69 that also included four birdies and four bogeys. "A good round," said Watson, a four-time winner this season and the pre-tournament favorite for the $72,000 first prize.

Watson was tied for third with Tom Kite, Bob Eastwood, George Burns, Jack Renner, Mark McCumber and Bob Byman, also with 69's.

Defending champion Lee Elder shot a 75, U.S. Open king "Hale" Irwin had 73, Masters titleholder Fuzzy Zoeller a 74 and 67-year-old Sam Snead struggled to a 76.

Dave Barr of Kelowna, B.C., shot an opening-round 75 and Jim Nelford of Burnaby, B.C., had a 76.

Stark takes it by two strokes

CORNER BROOK, Nfld. (CP) — Rebecca Stark of Armdale shot a second-round 78 to give Nova Scotia an upset two-stroke victory Thursday in the inter-provincial team standings at the Canadian junior women's golf championships.

The team competition, which includes the best three scores of the day from the four players comprising each provincial team, is contested over the opening 36 holes of the 54-hole, three-day tournament.

Stark's round held off a record-shattering 75 by 18-year-old Dawn Coe of Lake Cowichan, B.C., to give Nova Scotia the team title with 331 strokes to 333 for British Columbia.

Ontario, which has won the title six times in the last 10 years, was third at 337 followed by Quebec, 345; Manitoba and Alberta, 351; Saskatchewan, 354; Newfoundland, 364; New Brunswick, 369, and Prince Edward Island 376.

Callan is 10 strokes off the pace but handled herself well under adverse playing conditions at the tricky 5,600-yard hill-top course.

Today's final round promises to be action-filled as Stark, Getty and Coe vie for the national junior title in their final year of eligibility.

Getty has been golfing only three years and failed to qualify for the B.C. team. Her parents decided to send her to the event because she wants to apply for a scholarship at a university in the U.S.

"A national title would be impressive," Getty said following her second-round score of 70.

Stark is also under pressure because she was born and raised in Corner Brook and learned to play golf at Blomidon. She moved to Nova Scotia four years ago with her family.

"She's really one of us," said one club member. "And she's going to win it for us too."

Stark, 18, retained her fourstroke lead at 154 for the individual title over Janine Getty of Burnaby, B.C., who is also 18. Although Coe broke the record 76 set by Stark opening day, she gained little ground and sits in third at 162. The title will be decided in today's final round.

Allison Orritt of Edmonton and Nancy Moon of Swift Current, Sask., both 17, are tied for fourth at 163.

Canada splits two

HILO, Hawaii (CP) — Canada's men's team at the Pacific Rim junior volleyball tournament split two games Wednesday to match its opening-day performance in the international competition.

Canada defeated the host Hilo team 15-11, 16-14, 15-6 before losing to Japan 15-4, 9-15, 16-14, 15-10.

British Columbia's men's team had the same 2-2 record after losing 15-4-15-1, 15-9 to the defending champion United States team and 10-15, 15-7, 15-5, 15-10 to Honolulu.

The seven-team men's event is being run on a round-robin draw.

In women's play — nine teams divided into two pools — Canada evened its record at 1-1 by defeating Honolulu 14-15, 15-11, 16-14, 15-7, B.C. had the same record after losing to the U.S. 15-6, 14-16, 15-3, 15-8.

The competition ends Saturday.

Standings compiled in tragic yacting race

PLYMOUTH, England (Reuter) — Australia was declared winner Thursday of the Admiral's Cup yachting series, taking the trophy for only the second time.

With the last of the previously-untraced boats involved in the Fastnet race positively sighted early Thursday, the organizers were able to compile Cup standings.

The Australian team totalled 1,088 points for the five-race series with the United States runners-up on 1,013. Britain, winners of the Cup on the two previous occasions, had to settle for sixth place, even though the British yacht Eclipse headed the individual standings.

The French entry Jubilee was placed second in the individual competition with Australia's top yacht, Impetuous, third.

The Cup presentation will take place Friday, but instead of the customary celebration party afterwards, it will be followed by a church service for the 17 yachtsmen who lost their lives during the storm-whipped Fastnet race.

A total of 23 yachts of the 306-strong Fastnet fleet sank or were abandoned in the violent storm which cut through the fleet earlier this week.

The winning Australian trio was led by Impetuous in third place on corrected time. Police Car was fourth and Ragamuffin 13th.

The United States placed Impetuous 15th, Williwaw 15th and Aries 28th.

Admiral's Cup team results:

1. Australia, 1,088 points

Cosmos take lead

TORONTO (CP) — Second-half goals by Johan Neeskens, Vladislav Bogicevic and Rick Davis gave New York Cosmos a 3-1 victory Thursday and a one-game lead in their North American Soccer League quarter-final with Toronto Blizzard before a record crowd of 30,356 at Exhibition Stadium.

The crowd was believed to be the largest ever to watch a soccer game in Toronto. Second game is scheduled for Sunday night in Giants Stadium at East Rutherford, N.J.

After an uneventful first half, with neither goalender — Blagoje Tamindic for Toronto and Hubert Birkenmeier for Cosmos — facing any difficult shots, the second half proved a free-scoring session.

Both teams kept the ball moving and played evenly during the first 45 minutes with action moving from one end of the field to the other.

Neeskens scored midway through the second half when he picked up a loose ball deep in the Toronto zone and booted it into an open Blizzard net at 60:26 to take a 1-0 Cosmos lead.

Bogicevic scored the insurance goal at 80:16 when he took the ball out of a crowded in front of the Toronto goal and drove it across the crease from six feet out and into the lower right hand corner.

Davis's goal came at 87:08 and was the result of a breakaway that started 40 metres out. Davis took the shot, from 25 metres, hand-cuffed Tamindic.

New emphasis on fish industry

SEATTLE (AP) — Secretary of Interior Cecil Andrus today unveiled a $90 million proposal to rebuild salmon runs in the United States Northwest, and while it was called a good beginning, there already are indications it will undergo largescale revision. The plan, with a 10-year time frame, calls for new enhancement programs, the buying back of commercial fishing boats from non-Indians and a loan program for Indians to buy gear.

The federal plan is far less than the $208 million enhancement, research and buy-back program recommended by a federal study last year.

Already, the main catch in the proposal appears to be a section which would allow the federal government to withhold $75 million unless the state antes up $75 million of its own.

CUTTING COSTS
Andrus said the Carter administration is trimming expenditures but state Democratic Representative Don Bonker said the problem is basically a federal responsibility.

"It's a problem of federal dams on the Columbia River killing fish and of Canadian interception of fish runs."

Consequently, the federal government should spend more money than Andrus proposed, Bonker said.

The plan comes five weeks after the U.S. Supreme Court largely upheld U.S. District Judge George Boldt's 1974 decision that said treaty Indians must be given the opportunity to catch at least half of the harvestable salmon and steelhead.

That pain in the back...

maybe it's trying to tell you something. Maybe it's saying you should be more careful when you're lifting—that you should make sure the load isn't too heavy, and that you lift with your legs instead of your back. Maybe it's complaining about the way you twist when you turn instead of shifting your feet and turning with your whole body.

It might even be saying that you should take a little time now and then to do some simple exercises to strengthen your back.

Tourism in Terrace

Tourism has been booming throughout the Terrace area as visitors from all over the world come to enjoy the outdoors. A Tourist Information Booth employee said Thursday about 50 visitors a day come to the information booth. In addition to Canadian tourists, the spokesman said Americans from Oregon, California, Texas, and New York or Europeans, especially Germans, frequently come through the area.

Fertility drug seems to work

NAPLES, Italy (AP) — A 29-year-old Naples woman on fertility treatment gave birth prematurely today to octuplets, five girls and three boys. One girl died hours later and a doctor said the seven other babies were seriously underweight.

Doctors at Naples' Hospital of the Incurable said the babies' weights ranged from 14 ounces to 2.3 pounds. A doctor said he had "some hope" the two largest of the infants would survive.

The births took 20 minutes with a doctor and three nurses attending, hospital spokesmen said.

The mother was identified as Mrs. Pasqualina Chianese. She was reported to have delivered six children three years ago, all of whom died a few hours after birth. She was said to be physically well, but afraid of losing all the infants. Mrs. Chianese and her husband, Stefano, an insurance company employee, live in a Naples suburb.

The other babies were rushed to nearby hospitals and placed in incubators. If the seven children survive, it could be a world record.

The previous highest number of surviving children in a multiple birth was six — which the Guinness Book of World Records says occurred twice, in Sydney, Australia, in 1971 and in Cape Town, South Africa, in 1974. Guinness officials in London said they based their multiple birth records on infants that survived their first birth-days.

The Guinness book notes that the highest number in a medically recorded multiple birth was nine, on three occasions — the 1971 Sydney birth, in Philadelphia in 1972 and in Bangladesh in 1977. All the children in the Philadelphia and Bangladesh births died.

There were undocumented reports earlier this century of 10 births, Guinness notes.

The increase in tourism has economic benefits for the area as well. Bob Park, manager of All Season Sporting Goods, said tourism brings "quite a few dollars" into the city.

"There's a lot of Europeans, especially Germans, coming into the area," he explained. "We've also had a lot of Albertans, who are the best tourists when it comes to spending money," he added.

Measles an epidemic

VANCOUVER (CP) — Measles have reached epidemic proportions here this year, says Dr. David Kinloch, the city's new medical health officer.

Kinloch said in a recent interview there are more than seven times as many cases being reported in the first six months of 1979 than occurred during the whole of 1978.

"Practically none of these youngsters need have been infected if they had been immunized," he said. "Measles could be wiped out in a few years, as smallpox has, if all children were immunized as soon as they are a year old."

In Canada this year there have been 16,265 of measles up to June 16 compared with 3,813 for the same period last year. In Vancouver there have been 148 cases compared with 20 in 1978.

Kinloch, who took his position about a month ago, said he is concerned about the city's immunization record, partly because of the difficulty in obtaining accurate records.

"We have to find some way to persuade private practitioners to inform us when they do immunizations," he said. "It is also essential that each individual have a record of when and with what he (or) she has been immunized."

He said he thought there may be more measles cases than hit the official records because many doctors are too busy to keep up-to-date on records to the health department, despite a legal requirement to do so.

Accurate personal records are particularly important for those past the age of 20 because of changes in a number of vaccines, he said. It has been found that the first measles vaccines using dead virus only gave immunity for a limited time, he said. Now high school and college students are getting the disease in increased numbers.

Current vaccines, given to a child after age one, are believed to provide lifetime immunity.

Kinloch said he has found different levels of immunization in different parts of the city.

"For instance in the western part 80 to 85 per cent of the children have been immunized while in the eastern sections only 65 to 75 per cent are protected."

He attributes this partly to language difficulties and the cultural differences of recent immigrants who tend to congregate in the east side of the city. Most of this year's cases have been in older children about nine or 10, Kinloch said.

Make home the perfect setting for yourself

A kitchen designed for the handicapped

KITCHEN FOR THE HANDICAPPED — According to its designer, Bill Ketcham, CKD, General Electric's Kitchen Designer Manager, major features of kitchen include installation of control switches at the front of the counter, extensive countertop lighting, and limited base cabinets, so a wheelchair can roll up to the counters — including the sink area.

One of the nation's leading appliance manufacturers has designed a "kitchen for the handicapped," formulated with the needs of the ambulatory and visually handicapped in mind.

William J. Ketcham, CKD, kitchen design manager for General Electric and designer of the kitchen, feels the concept of the kitchen is very timely, as the word 'handicapped' today is much more all-encompassing.

The public is becoming more aware of the handicaps imposed by birth defects and such crippling diseases as polio and multiple sclerosis. Moreover, more than two million persons are blind or visually handicapped.

Advances in medical science are helping to keep people alive longer, and the natural increase in the nation's median age means an ever-increasing percentage of the population over 65. Americans over 65 now number 23 million, and by the year 2030 their number will swell to almost 52 million, one out of every six Americans.

Factors like these generated the idea of a "handicapped" kitchen, Ketcham said. "The design takes into consideration the homemaker whose movement is limited or who is confined to a sitting position. My thinking was to come up with a kitchen that was first of all functional, and to show how it could be built with contemporary styling while controlling costs."

The L-shaped kitchen is modified in the sink area and cooking center. The countertop is lower. There are no base cabinets (except beneath the wall oven and the tray cabinet between the dishwasher and refrigerator), so a wheelchair can roll up to and under the counters. A shallow-bowl sink with rear drain and single-control faucet also permits a straight-on approach and leg room under the counter and sink area.

For those who may find it difficult to reach controls, switches for the food waste disposer, hood fan and light are installed at the front of the counter, along with a switch for fluorescent countertop lighting.

While providing ample storage space, the cabinet design and location also are more functional for a homemaker with limited activity. There are easy-grip handles, and open shelving helps make cooking and serving utensils easy to reach. Items in the storage area above the wall oven can be reached from a sitting position, and the shelf around the counter also provides convenient storage for smaller items.

Ketcham points out that while such a kitchen can assist many handicapped persons to become more self-dependent, necessary modifications are not major tasks. For example, the cabinets by Scheich are stock units and the appliances are standard General Electric models. The only cabinetry modification necessary was one to allow the wall oven to be installed at a lower-than-usual height, and several manufacturers produce the shallow sink and elbow products.

Also in recognition of the needs of the visually handicapped, General Electric provides Braille-style knobs free of charge for any of its GE or Hotpoint brand ranges, as well as Braille control panels for its home laundry equipment. These controls may be obtained by sending the model and serial number of the appliance to the range or home laundry department at General Electric, Appliance Park, Louisville, Ky. 40225.

Appliance care-and-care manuals on all products now made by GE and Hotpoint are available on tape cassettes for the visually handicapped. They are obtainable from the Center for Consumer Products Recordings, Associated Blind of Kentucky, P.O. Box 306, Louisville, Ky. 40201. Requests should indicate product, brand, model number and year purchased, if known. There is a nominal charge of $1.25 to cover cost of each cassette and for packaging for the mails.

Selling your home

SELL FASTER AND FOR MORE

If you are one of the thousands of Canadians trying to sell their homes, like everyone else you want to complete the sales as rapidly as possible and at the same time obtain a top dollar. While your real estate salesperson plays a prime role in selling your home, you too can help by applying some common sense thinking, states A.E. LePage Coast to Coast Real Estate Service, Canada's largest real estate organization.

The most important point of all when selling your house is to put yourself in a buyer's position. Try to see to it that everything about the house would meet with your approval if the roles were reversed. Looking at your home from a prospective buyer's perspective may help you identify items needing your attention that you may have otherwise overlooked.

Try to remember the first time you saw your home before you bought it. Remember which features caught your eye and which didn't. Highlight those features you liked and try to correct those you didn't.

First impressions are lasting. For this reason, it is wise to maintain your home as if friends were coming to visit. Real estate salespeople generally agree that a major help is to make those minor repairs you've long put off — stuck doors, loose door knobs, drippy taps, cracked windows, squeaking hinges, noisy vent fans, burnt-out light bulbs, faulty light switches, counter top scratches and doorbells that don't work.

Minor repairs take minutes, but they can pay big dividends. Just a few small problems can cause you embarrassment and give a prospective buyer the subtle impression that there may be worse difficulties that are not as evident.

Your home should be tour-clean from morning to night. Often there is little time between the salesperson's call and his arrival with prospective buyers. That means beds must be made, dishes done or hidden out of sight in a dishwasher, newspapers and magazines picked up off the floor, ashtrays cleaned, front steps and stairways uncluttered. In the summer, keep your lawns trimmed and edged and flower beds cultivated. In winter, remove snow and ice from sidewalks and porches.

Be sure that all windows are sparkling. Open all drapes because a bright home invites inspection. You may want to clean some interior walls and floors. If you decide to repaint or re-paper, use neutral colors. A new owner can live with a neutral color temporarily, until he or she decides to repaint in their favorite color.

Because the kitchen is one of the most important rooms, a sparkling kitchen can be an excellent selling point. Neat, orderly rooms also look larger. Remove extra pieces of furniture so visitors can get the full view of a room or hallway and visualize how their furniture will look in it. Put your closets in order. Removing some of the clothing will make them appear larger. And to display the maximum storage space you have in your basement or attic, remove all unnecessary articles.

Turn on certain lights before the salesperson arrives with a prospective buyer so added warmth is provided. Turn off the television and stereo. Dogs and other pets should be controlled and, if possible, kept out of the house. If a prospect does not like animals, he might change his opinion of the cleanliness of your home.

If you have a fireplace and it's winter, a good fire can be a bonus in bringing out that natural "lived-in" feeling. Also in the winter you can place photographs taken of your home in the summer where potential buyers can see them as they tour the house.

Real estate salespeople advise you not to accompany the prospect during an inspection tour. Too often, owners make buyers feel like intruders and the prospect subsequently hurries through the house. Statistics show that most homes are sold when the owner is not present during the showing. The salesperson knows what the buyer wants and is qualified to emphasize the features of your home.

If you must stay during the inspection, be courteous but do not force conversation with prospects. They are not there to pay a social visit. Let the salesperson answer any questions that are raised. Try to avoid discussions of price or terms. Through experience and training, the salesperson is better equipped to bring negotiations to a quick and favorable conclusion.

When you set an asking price, remember that it's exactly that — an asking price. Very seldom does anyone pay the full asking price for a resale home. Real estate salespeople agree that pricing is where most errors are made by homeowners. There's a tendency by every homeowner to have an inflated opinion of the value of his home. But setting an asking price too high leaves the house on the market too long — so long that other salespeople and their clients begin to believe there must be something wrong with the house or it would have sold.

a moving experience

BETWEEN OFFER AND POSSESSION

The time between the acceptance of an offer to purchase and the possession of the property, is the period during which the conditions of the contract should be fulfilled, and during which you should prepare to move.

It is important that everything proceed according to the times and dates specified in the 'offer' contract.

1. Keep a copy of the offer for active reference. Make up a list of dates with respect to timing and check a day or two in advance to be certain that there are no delays or unanticipated complications. List appointments and dates with respect to mortgage interviews, application and processing; lawyers appointments and processing; and keep all the information in note form regarding instructions and details.
2. Alert telephone, utilities, post office and domestic suppliers of disconnection dates and obtain installation and connection dates for the new property.
3. File all required change of address notices such as drivers license, trade accounts, services, banks and cancel newspapers.
4. Make your arrangements for moving and be certain that you have a key to the new property on moving day.

There are two aspects of the period between offer and possession.

One is the contractual requirements of the offer, such as arranging a mortgage, payment of monies, cash for adjustments on closing, transfer of insurance, some of which may be attended to by your lawyer or agent to ensure the satisfactory conclusion of the contractual obligations, but it is prudent to maintain your own schedule as well.

The second aspect of the period are the preparations you will have to make to move. Your plans for moving may flow from the processing and detail of your contractual obligations which deserve careful attention to reduce the possibility of delays. These plans will be your personal arrangements, but in all the activity preceding a move, remember to leave yourself enough time to revisit the new property the day before, or the day of finalizing the transaction to be certain that any extras that were included in the offer, are in fact in the house.

Fences create city gardens

The opportunities offered by urban life, and a surging interest in the restoration of older city residences, is attracting increasing numbers of young families to the city. And according to the International Fence Industry Association, well-planned fencing has permitted green thumbs to flourish in city gardens.

Whether on a rooftop or balcony or in a tiny courtyard, city gardens can provide tranquil havens and serve as expressions of their owners' personalities. They can be planned to consume as much or as little time as the owners want to spend in maintaining them.

Two things are essential for successful city gardening: careful design and appropriate fencing.

Simplicity is the key in designing gardens for small spaces, and the design should center on one main feature—a centerpiece of statuary, a rock garden, or a small sitting area.

Every element must be carefully planned, as mistakes loom large in a small space.

Since city gardens exist in very close proximity to the owners' living space, a garden design that reflects the character of the interior decor is most effective.

A good local nursery can suggest plants that grow well in the area's climate, and can give tips on preparing lightweight, self-contained flower beds for rooftops and balconies. Large pots and urns are not only attractive and space-saving containers for garden plants, they are also portable, enabling the gardener to rearrange a garden as he or she might rearrange the living room.

Critical to the process of designing a city garden is the selection of appropriate fencing. It is important to consult with a local member of the International Fence Industry Association at the earliest stages of planning.

An IFIA member is a good source of details on local codes governing fencing, and can provide information on the types of fencing best suited to the special requirements of a city garden.

Doctor points to waiting list as proof

ALERT BAY, B.C. (CP) — When the talk turns to Indian demands that he retire, Dr. Jack Pickup lashes out at band council staff and reporters who took their word instead of his. Then he points to his waiting room as proof of this community's faith in him.

Most of Pickup's patients are Indians. There now is a doctor working temporarily on the Nimpkish Indian reserve, but most band members still come to see Pickup, even though he was found negligent after a young Indian girl died in his care.

"Most of the Indians are on my side in the fight," said Pickup, who has practiced here for almost 30 of his 61 years. "It's just that one group down there, that group that runs the band office." Reflecting the feelings of many non-Indian residents here, Pickup directs his bitterness at reporters.

"I'm the only one on trial here. They check my credentials but they don't check my detractors."

Alert Bay is on tiny Cormorant Island, a 20-minute ferry ride from Port McNeill on northern Vancouver Island. The Indian reserve is at one end of town; non-Indian residents and businesses are at the other. During the past few months, the split in the village has been more than physical.

But for many here, including Pickup, the loyalty of some Indian patients disproves media reports that the village's 1,800 residents — about half of them Indians — split along racial lines over the doctor's competence.

For others, that loyalty has neither dispelled the suspicions about Pickup nor has it answered the broader question of the quality of Indian health care that was hanging over Alert Bay even before 11-year-old Renee Smith died from a ruptured appendix in January.

Nimpkish band manager Pearl Alfred says some Indians still go to Pickup because of habit, because they don't know there's a choice or because they can't go to doctors in other communities as easily as whites.

Others, she admits, still believe in Pickup's competence. But the elected leaders of the Indian community don't, and neither does Mrs. Alfred who had three of her four children delivered by Pickup.

"But Pickup's only part of the problem. We're looking at the whole question of Indian health statistics which are pretty grim."

By alluding to the band's alleged radical connections, people seem to be casting doubts over everything its leaders say. It's an old trick, argue band leaders, but the allegation is irrelevant.

"If it's radical to worry about Indian health, then we should all be radical," said Mrs. Alfred, 45. "No one wants to talk about Indian health problems in a community like this or in any community in B.C. Everyone wants to think we have the good life."

After a post-inquest investigation, the B.C. College of Physicians and Surgeons, which licences doctors, agreed Pickup had made a mistake, but found him competent in a series of tests.

Since then, changes have quietly been made at St. George's Hospital, adjacent to an Indian burial ground and its dozen looming totem poles. Until a federal doctor arrived in late June, Pickup had been the only doctor working there for more than a year, on call 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

The hospital now is operating under surgical guidelines for small hospitals which limit the kinds of surgery that Pickup or any other doctor can perform while there are fewer than three doctors.

Hospital board member Bill Deadman said major surgery, defined as involving any major body cavity, organ or vessel, will generally be referred to a hospital with at least three doctors, the nearest one being in Campbell River. In the past, Pickup has performed some major surgery with the assistance of visiting doctors. On occasion, only two doctors have been involved. Referrals now will be made more often, said Deadman.

Other changes are being made at the hospital based on the recommendations of a committee headed by Dr. Charles Ballam of the health ministry. Ballam says "the recommendations follow good practice that we hope any hospital would follow."

Indian leaders, who wanted a full public inquiry, say the college hearing and the Ballam report amounted to a whitewash. They are awaiting a promised visit by federal Health Minister David Crombie.

"We've been going on this since January and we're not about to give up," said Mrs. Alfred. "We intend to ask the questions publicly. If the minister won't meet with us, we'll find other ways to do it."

Various medical bodies have increased their efforts to get a second permanent doctor in Alert Bay, but there are many factors working against them: isolation, long hours and the controversy surrounding the community in the past few months.

Any attempts to pronounce the controversy dead are premature. There is still talk among both Indians and whites about Pickup's alleged drinking problem, a question brought-up at the inquest.

The Indian band still wants an investigation of specific complaints against Pickup which it says its members have made in affidavits.

There are still hard feelings among many whites about Vera Robinson, a former federal Indian health worker, and Kwakwaka'wakw spokesman Dara Culhane, two whites who have spoken on the health-care situation. Robinson, now working for the band, produced widely-quoted figures on Indian deaths that turned out to apply to several bands, not just the Nimpkish. Culhane, daughter of prisoners' rights activist Claire Culhane, is married to a band member.

Many whites jumped quickly to Pickup's defence with tributes — many in the form of letters to the editor of a Port Hardy newspaper — to his service as former mayor, current board of trade president and longtime doctor.

Indian leaders say that's not the point: that Pickup has done much for the community in the past does not necessarily make him a good doctor now.

The prescription most often offered for the community's ills is moderation and the same kind of co-operation the two groups show in the fishing industry, this area's economic bond.

When hospital administrator James Quigley says it will take "everyone working together, tolerance, co-operation, understanding," he sounds as if he hasn't seen as much as he would like to.

Canada's new sub chaser undergoes testing

HALIFAX (CP) — As the first of Canada's new Aurora submarine hunter-killer aircraft wings its way across the Arctic in its first northern test flight, the program to build its 17 sister craft is on schedule and on budget, the program's commander said Thursday.

Brig.-Gen. Alan Pickering, in Canada after three years supervising the Aurora construction program at the Lockheed Corp. plant in Burbank, Calif., said the $1.031-billion program, in the planning stages since the late 1960s, will provide a new and sophisticated front line of defence against foreign submarines plying Canadian waters.

Pickering, the Maritime Air Group commander, has responsibility for aircraft patrols in Canada's coastal areas. The first Aurora will arrive at CFB Greenwood, N.S., its principal base, in May, 1980. The other 17 will follow at a rate of about two a month. They will replace 25 aging CL-28 Argus aircraft that have patrolled Canadian waters since 1959.

Pickering said an industrial benefits package worked out with Lockheed provides for a return on government investment that more than equals the amount spent to buy the Aurora.

While the Lockheed contract is worth about $750 million in direct payments, the company has promised to return, with U.S. government co-operation, about $937 million in Canadian funds in industrial benefits to Canadian companies.

That $937 million is in addition to money Lockheed has traditionally spent in the Canadian market and will be spread over about 15 years.

If asked, Lockheed will also provide $5 million for a study of the Canadian aerospace industry to determine where improvements can be made.

Pickering said the money would be a donation and that Lockheed would obtain no special rights to information about the industry for its investment.

As Pickering spoke, a fully manned Aurora was flying above the Arctic in the first test of the aircraft in Canadian conditions.

A modified version of the American P-3C Orion long-range patrol aircraft, the turboprop Aurora had to undergo extensive modifications to suit Canadian defence needs.

The fuel-efficient Aurora can get into the air faster than an Argus, travel twice as fast and stay at its target longer.

Computerized navigation gear capable of operating in any weather, specially-designed radar to track submarines and icebergs, and communications equipment that is compatible with existing Canadian and NATO systems are features of the new aircraft.

The test flight was part of a trip that took the Aurora from Burbank to Abbotsford, B.C. for an air show, then north to Alaska and across the Arctic to Thule, Greenland. Thursday, the Aurora took off from Thule to head to a U.S. base in Alaska.

Cutback aim pre-Trudeau civil service

OTTAWA (CP) — In 1970, shortly after Pierre Trudeau became prime minister, there were 88 Canadians for every federal government employee. Today there are 72.

Treasury Board President Sinclair Stevens told reporters Wednesday the goal of his four-year government reduction program is to get the ratio back to its pre-Trudeau levels.

Since the beginning of the decade the population has increased by about 10 per cent, from 21.4 million to 23.5 million, he said.

During the same period, the number of persons working for the federal government increased by 31 per cent to 325,120. By 1983, Stevens plans to get the public service back down to 273,000.

He is convinced the public will not suffer. The resulting federal workforce should be more efficient and streamlined and should give taxpayers a better value for each dollar they contribute to the federal treasury.

In fact, Stevens says, the numerical reduction in government manpower is little more than a side benefit of his party's commitment to get the government out of many activities that can be better handled by the private sector.

"A reduction in the number of federal public servants is an incidental effect."

Stevens thinks government employees and their unions will be reasonable in accepting his objectives once they understand the point of the cuts is to reduce the cost and pervasiveness of government in the affairs of the 'average' person or business organization.

He said the manufacturing sector provides the government with a valuable model. Although it employs fewer people than it did a decade ago, it is more productive.

One reason is the efficient use of computers and other manpower-saving devices. Stevens acknowledges that there are differences between manufacturing — where the objective is to increase output — and the government, which aims to provide the public with certain essential services. But he believes nonetheless that it will be useful for the government to imitate the private sector.

With the help of computers and other labor-saving machines, he sees no reason why the government cannot maintain its level of service while reducing its payroll.

Resignation said a sign of failure

WASHINGTON (AP) — The resignation of Andrew Young concludes in utter failure the latest U.S. effort to find some way to deal with the Palestine Liberation Organization. It is a failure that may have serious repercussions for the Camp David peace process and the U.S. supply of imported oil.

Young's meeting in New York last month with a PLO representative occurred when the Carter administration was trying hard behind the scenes to reach an accommodation with the PLO.

While Israel scorns the PLO as terrorist, the Arab world recognizes it as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

Most of the U.S. feelers went out indirectly, through talks with other Arab countries, but Young decided to meet directly with the PLO representative to the UN.

Since 1975, Israel has insisted that the United States pledge not to deal with the PLO unless it first recognizes Israel's right to exist. In return, Israel agreed to the 1975 partial withdrawal from the Sinai and the 1979 treaty with Egypt.

Although the PLO has consistently refused to recognize Israel's right to exist, some spokesmen have indicated it might do so in return for international recognition of the Palestinians' right to form a state.

Young was trying successfully to delay a vote in the UN Security Council on a resolution supporting the right of the Palestinians to form their state on territory occupied by Israel in the 1967 war. The U.S. has announced it would veto such a resolution.

But Young failed in his larger objective of reaching agreement with the Palestinians on a compromise that both the U.S. and the PLO could support.

Such a compromise might have added to existing UN resolutions affirming the legitimate rights of the Palestinians.

Those existing resolutions affirm Israel's right to exist and outline a peace settlement in which it gives back territories captured in 1967 in return for recognition by the Arab world.

"In view of the rumor that the PLO was willing to accept Resolution 242, I thought it was worth this government taking the time to explore," Young said.

His exploration ended in failure. Israel was increasingly nervous about the indirect overtures the U.S. was making to the PLO. It asked for and got reassurances last week that the U.S. was not changing its policies.

The PLO, at a meeting of its national council two days later, insisted it would never accept a resolution that did not recognize its right to statehood. The revelation of the Young meeting was the final blow to the U.S. effort at compromise.

Now, the U.S. faces the likely prospect of being forced to veto a resolution on Palestinian rights in the Security Council meeting next Thursday.

DEAR ABBY

Dutch-Treat Wedding No Treat to Mad Mom

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1979 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: Our son never had much success with girls, so he fell for the first one who paid any attention to him and they're getting married next month. We tried to get him to wait, but he wouldn't listen.

I called the bride's mother to find out how many guests we were allowed to have, and I offered to pay for any extra people we wanted to invite over and above that number. She said, "We never had any trouble with our other daughter's wedding because the groom's parents realized it was also their son's wedding and they paid for half of it."

Abby, every etiquette book I've ever seen plainly states that the bride's family is supposed to put on the wedding. I realize that weddings cost a lot, but if people can't afford it they shouldn't expect the other family to pay half.

Am I out of line to ignore their brazen suggestion even though we're better off than they?

GROOM'S MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: You are correct about what the etiquette books say. But in MY book, consideration and common sense outrank etiquette. In some cases, the groom's parents have not only shared expenses, they've put on the wedding. But that happens only if they're delighted with the match.

DEAR ABBY: I have been courting a gorgeous woman for eight months. She is 20 years younger than I. (I am 82.)

We love each other dearly. My dilemma is whether it would be fair of me to ask her to marry me when I know she could find a younger man who could do more of the things she loves to do—dance, swim, garden and travel.

I'm afraid she would be giving up so much, but she says what time we would have together would be well worth the sacrifice on her part.

We live in different states. I've visited her once, and she has come to visit me three times. We have a wonderful time together. Abby, I think about her constantly, but I don't want to deprive her of the chance to find a younger man while she's still able to.

She would have to quit her job and move here, but I am financially able to take care of her.

I'm still mentally alert and in fairly good health for my age, but I'm lacking in strength because, living alone, I don't eat properly. (She's a wonderful cook so I'm sure I'd get stronger if she married me.)

Please help me decide what to do.

YES OR NO?

DEAR YES: Yes! You say you "love each other dearly," so what are you waiting for? All is fair in love and war. If the lady wanted a younger man, you wouldn't be in her life. Don't count your years, count your blessings, and go ahead and marry her.

DEAR ABBY: My problem is my mother. She's too lenient! After she gets angry and punishes me, she often will apologize. Why should she apologize when I know I had the punishment coming?

Often the punishment will be depriving me of my dessert. Later, she will bring the dessert to my room.

I could give hundreds of other examples, Abby, but I think you know what I mean. Please tell me why my mother acts this way? I can't figure her out.

MIXED UP IN CLEVELAND

DEAR MIXED: Your mother (like many others) fears you'll love her less because she has punished you. (She's wrong.) No child ever resented punishment he knew he had coming.

Discipline is PROOF of love.

What's In It For You???

Lower prices and a better environment can come from avoiding some legislation.

Many have discovered that the much-touted "bottle-bill" requiring beverages to come in deposit cans and bottles can have an effect opposite to what its proponents claim.

In Michigan, the most heavily populated state to implement the controversial law, consumers pay an average of 36 cents more per six pack for soft drinks and 30 cents more per six pack for beer than consumers in Wisconsin, Indiana and Ohio. About 300 good jobs have been lost so far and many community recycling centers closed as a direct result of the bill.

Since people create litter, and only people can solve it, many suggest alternatives to forced deposits. One is the program in the State of Washington which attacks all litter, not just bottles and cans. It requires litter bags in all cars and boats at all times. Violators face a $10 fine. The law also requires all public places to provide litter receptacles that meet specifications making them uniform and easy to identify. Widespread signs on the highways reinforce an anti-litter ethic. This "people program" can pay off. The State has reported growth of a 27 million recycling industry and 1,000 new jobs.

What's in it for you? A better looking neighborhood, rather than higher prices at the neighborhood store.

BUILT ON BRICK

An unusual village begins to restore itself

By Alice Tomlinson

In 1912, the people of Clayburn Village built a little church. Since a church always meant that the people had come to stay, this little red brick building put the Fraser Valley community on the British Columbia map. But first, they built the brickworks, and then the plant yard went up near the old root manager's house, followed by the superintendent's house, and the accountant's, and so on, all marching in neat pecking order up Clayburn Street, below the shadow of Sumas Mountain, and all in brick, too.

In 1907 came the general store. A year later the school went up. Additional frame houses were built. Water was piped in—free to the residents. And power. Sewers, storm drains. Who paid the bills? The brickworks, because Clayburn was a company town, the first one in B.C.

FAMOUS ARCHITECT

Before 1905, Clayburn was little more than a patch of Matsqui prairie. The only white resident there was John MacLure, a former Royal Engineer. He had the Cariboo Road and the Gas-then as a telegrapher before settling down to the life of a farmer.

He raised three children on that good bottom land, a daughter, Sara, and two sons, Charlie and Samuel. (Another brother and sister came along much later.)

Sara went on into the newspaper business, Samuel went on to become the famous architect—and Charlie? Well...

Charlie did many things. First of all, on holiday at Hazlebrae, his father's home, he bought what was to become Abbotsford, 64 hectares of it at any rate, and of smashing appearance.

On another holiday, he was making clay. Staking out his 256 hectare claim, he sold shares and incorporated as the Vancouver Fireclay Company. The brick-works, and then the plant yard went up near the old root manager's house, followed by the superintendent's house, and the accountant's, and so on, all marching in neat pecking order up Clayburn Street, below the shadow of Sumas Mountain, and all in brick, too.

Samuel probably led to the smashing appearance of these same houses because they utilized the natural land flow upwards to the mountain.

Casting about for a name for the brick, what better word combination could there be than Clayburn. The name of the town followed suit. It was definitely the best laid-out town around. The abundant use of brick gave an aura of permanence to what could just as easily have been a shantytown.

GOOD BRICK

It was good brick, and it sold as far away as Calgary and even into Victoria, used for such diversified building projects as the Hotel Vancouver, the Gas-then town sidewalks, and Oakalla Prison.

But Charlie did not last long at Clayburn. He relinquished his managerial capacity while still retaining shares, spending his last years prospecting, visiting native friends, and playing golf in Stanley Park. The brickworks, now known as Clayburn Industries Ltd., still operates in Abbotsford.

When the clay ran out in Clayburn in the early Thirties, a brickworks was built in nearby Kilgord to accommodate clays from the Straiton area. Many bought it from the United Church, and the work began. The church was dismantled, every reusable item stored. Bricks were cleaned and strapped on pallets to decorate interior walls. All the wood was refinished. A new foundation was poured and the rebuilding began, with special heritage bricks from the Kilgord plant.

It was completed just last year at a cost of $28,000, not including labor, and paid for by private donations from area residents and from Canada Works grants.

Now that it's over, what have the B.C.'s got? A beginning, a first for the little town.

Despite the threat of depopulation, it was not so much to keep the town alive as to preserve the beginnings of one of the oldest businesses in B.C., they got? A beginning, a first for the little town.

There are no empty showcases. Every building is lived in. Over the years, it was used by every denomination, the last Even service being held on June 6, 1958. The church closed its doors and the years passed.

If you are in the neighborhood, drop in at the general store. It's been there since 1909, rolled around, brick was disintegrating and wood was rotting. The folks there will be glad to assist you.

The Clayburn Community Club assist you.

FUEL ECONOMY

The author is Manager of Sales Engineering for the Amalie Refining Company, which has been concerned with America's drivers and their automotive needs for more than 75 years.

By Al Sweetley

A car is as fuel efficient—or profligate—as its driver. Here's how to put fuel economies within your reach.

Wise driving will whittle down fuel waste.

Drive with your reason, not your reflexes. Plan ahead to avoid sudden stops and starts. Maintain constant speeds. Move into high gear soon and avoid using your passing gear or over-drive unless necessary.

Reducing your speed from 60 to 50 mph means a fuel reduction of more than 13 percent in most cars. That's because the engine operates more efficiently, and you cut down the increased wind resistance encountered at higher speeds.

Friction between moving metal parts in your car's engine is a source of waste. The thicker the lubricant you use, the more energy is needed to overcome friction.

Multi-grade lubricants can reduce fuel consumption up to six percent because they are thin enough at cold starting temperatures to pump freely with the least amount of internal friction while maintaining a heavy enough oil film at operating temperatures to provide proper protection.

NEWS OF NUTRITION

Breakfast: Going With The Grain

In meeting the nutritional needs of children and adults, the importance of a good breakfast cannot be overestimated. In this article, a scientist who has had long involvement with American breakfast habits explains how cereal-based breakfasts suit our changing lifestyles while contributing importantly to daily nutritional needs.

By Eugene B. Hayden, Ph.D.

Breakfast cereals are highly nutritious foods which, because of ease of preparation, are playing an increasingly important role in providing essential nutrition at breakfast for millions of children and adults each morning.

A recent study showed that ready-to-eat cereals are included in 44 percent of all child breakfasts. In fact, a bowl of cereal and milk has been the number one at-home breakfast choice for millions of Americans. According to the Fifth National Household Menu Census, breakfast is skipped three times more often by children in households which do not serve ready-to-eat cereals.

Today's breakfasts are often characterized by individual family members eating at different times, selecting and preparing their own food and, as a result, eating fewer food items. Thus, each food assumes an increasingly important nutritional role.

Ready-to-eat cereals are ideally suited as sources of needed nutrients because they are popular foods consumed by all segments of the population. As food consumption patterns at breakfast have changed,

Voluntary restoration of key nutrients in breakfast cereals to whole grain levels began in the early 1940's, fortification to higher than whole grain levels in the 1950's—until today more than 92% of ready-to-eat cereals are fortified.

protein, vitamin D and phosphorus.

The nutritional content of today's fortified ready-to-eat cereals, whether pre-sweetened or regular (non-presweetened), is the result of a series of voluntary responses by cereal makers to evolving knowledge of dietary needs. Cereal makers have been adding nutrients to breakfast cereals for 38 years and have provided information on nutritional content on cereal packages since 1941.

Breakfast is a vital part of daily nutrition, and we know that children who do not eat ready-to-eat cereals skip breakfast more often. Judgments on the nutritional importance of ready-to-eat cereals—their contribution to American breakfasts, their convenience and economic value—aren't matters for debate or opinion, they are matters of fact.

Dr. Hayden is president of the Cereal Institute, Inc., which was founded in 1943 to encourage greater awareness of the nutritional importance of breakfast and the role of cereals in the diet.
